That gem of the evening—a poor girl's
And there an officer, young and true,
With goiden badge and breast of blue,
Bowed down as any priest in prayer
And telt Christ's holy presence there,
And then he rose, and then the song and then he rose, and then the song that touched the hearts of that vast throng, smote his, and he, as in a dream, sat there beneath the lamplight's gleam.
He heard no more the bugic call,
He saw not any dead men tall,
He knew not any word or sign
